"Don't give up on love. Because there is always someone who loves you. Even if it's not the person you were hoping for."

Finding a perfect fit in love is a very difficult thing to do, mostly because none of us are perfect. Sure there are fairy tale scenarios we have all seen in movies, television and other media outlets, but the only fairy tales in life are those that we are willing to work towards.

Love between two different people requires an understanding that these two people will have to work every day with an honest effort in order to make things work. Love is no short sprint; love is a marathon. No two people will fit exactly together as we suspect they should because everyone has their differences. That's what is beautiful about humans, and human nature. Instead of working to be alike, a great couple will capitalize on each others strengths by filling in where their partner may have a weakness, only then will a couple truly fit together.
